A Snake Catcher's Mistake

Nelse Hoose of Spring Brook, Pa., is used handling rattlesnakes, but he made a mistake one day this month, and he came near losing his life on account of it. Rattlesnakes are thick in a rocky dell half a mile from Hoose's house at the foot of Shiny mountain, and Hoose often goes up to the deli at this time in the summer and catches a few for their oil. Two weeks ago last Saturdsy Hoose saw an uncommonly large rattler supning itself on the ground near the den, and he stole up to the sleeping reptile and puned its head to the earth with his crotchet stick. The snake was a remark-ably fine specimen, and, as it squirmed and buzzed and hissed in its efforts to get away, Hoose concluded to extract its poisonous fangs and take it home alive. He had done that to many a rattler before, and he took out a pair of nippers that he always carries when he goes snake hunting, and quickly deprived the ulinking angry reptile of its natural weapons—at least Hoose, thought he had completed the job, but in his haste he had only half done it. With the crotchet piece of sapling over the snake's neck, Hoose held the writhing body to the ground with his left foot and counted the rattles. There were thirteen of them. Hoose then grabbed the big rattler by the neck with his right the big rattler by the neck with his right hand, and by the tail with his left, and start for home. The ugly snake hissed and wrig gled all the way home, but Hoose kept a strong hold on both extremities until he was within a few rods of his house, when seeing his wife in the yard, he called out to her to see what he had got. Mrs. Hoose looked that way, and just then Hoose let loose of the snake's head and held the squirming reputile up by the tail with his left

House knew at once that he had been stung by a poisonous fang, and he flung the snake to the ground and crushed its head with his heel. Then he ran into Louse, but before he could get to the buttery his wrist began to swell, and he thought his time had come. There was no whisky in the house, but there was half a pint of alcohol in a bottle, and he drank it at once. Mrs Hoose ran crying down to Thaddeus Cole's house after some whiskey, and while she was gone Hoose nearly strangled himself by drinking a gill of strong campbor. Cole happened to have a gallon jug half full of cheap whiskey, and he grabbed it and ran to Hoose's the moment Mrs. Hoose told him what the trouble was. When he got there Hoose's arm was terribly swol len to the shoulder, and Cole lost no time in making Hoose swallow a quart of the liquor. By that time Hoose was very sleepy, but Cole labored with him until he got a pint more of the whisky down him. The bitten man was insensible for thirty hours, when he came to and began to complain of dreadful pains in his head. These continued for more than a day, when the swelling gradu-ally disappeared and a week from the time he had been poisoned Hoose was able to get around agaio. Before Hoose became un-conscious he told Cole bow he had pulled

How to LESSEN THE MOSQUITO PLAGUE. The practical question is, how can one so control these conditions as to limit the multiplication of the insects | mosquitoes |? Obviously the answer is, limit their natural breeding-grounds. When swamps are dried up, when stagnant pools are filled up, when brackish lakes and sluggish streams are drained and dredged and graded so as to give free current to their waters, when the swamp grasses, weeds, sedges, and various plants in which mosquitoes find refuge after transformation, are cut down and cleared away; when, in short, the scythe, lawn-mower, grubbing axe and gardner's hand of diligence, thrift, cleanliness and care have turned our country into a cultivated garden, the days of the mosquito as a pest will be numbered. Culex pipiens and all the other species of culicide (the family of mosqui-toes and gnats) will still have their representatives in the land; but they will be shorn of their power to deplete the veins of summer cottagers and guests and the purses of summer landlords. The second factor in limiting the number of mosquitoes is that of natural enemies. Of these only two may be mentioned—the dragon fly and the spider. It is a strange illustration of human perver-sity that these two animals, whose lives are spent in serving man, should be largely under the ban of human prejudice. The dragon-fly is dreaded; the spider is hated; and yet they are nature's checks upon the mosquito and other insects that otherwise would make our earth well-nigh uninhabitable.-North American Review for September
